Publishers, Evening World, N. Y. City.

There was a little happening in my Park Row store recently, which would seem to be of particular interest to you and I take the liberty of telling you about it. The Manager of this branch was approached by a gentleman, well known in Wall Street, with the statement that he had been waiting for twenty minutes in order to buy candy to take home to his family. He stated that he had been in Wall Street for twenty years, and he had never seen such a popular demand for any one thing among the members of the "Street" bankers, brokers, financiers of all kinds, as there was for my candies. He volunteered as a reason for this that these men, dealing as they do with large financial propositions, where sometimes a quarter of a cent means millions, have a keener appreciation of values than any other class.

my store, and why in addition to this appreciation of value, people of the "Street" followed his lead. He said that it was due to the merit of the Evening World as an advertising medium. They had received instigation from that paper. He further said that the Evening World was a Home Paper, a paper that went to the family, and was thoroughly discussed around the fireside.

Doing business as I do upon so small a margin of profit, I must naturally select the very best mediumn of publicity. I must have results. I have tried every mediumn of publicity in New York City, and I unhesitatingly pronounce the Evening World the best. The reason for this is obvious. The circulation of The World is a circulation of ACTUAL READERS. The paper is bought for no particular feature, but because it is all good. It is read from the front to the back page, and when it is read, it is carried home to be pored over by the family, and its readers are of the purchasing class—an all important factor.

Sincerely yours, .
